Abstract

NIST has coordinated an ongoing series of annual evaluations of automatic speaker recognition systems on limited duration segments of conversational telephone speech. After the main 1998 evaluation it was decided to hold a preliminary developmental evaluation during the summer of 1998 using, unlike the previous evaluations, 2-wire data, i.e. summed data of two conversational channels. This paper describes this evaluation and its results.